

How does Peer Support work?

Survivors and caregivers will be individually matched with peer support volunteers according to criteria, such as: diagnosis, cancer stage, and types of questions about resources and treatment.

Talking with someone who has lived with cancer and/or loved someone with cancer can reduce the sense of anxiety and isolation that a cancer diagnosis brings. These peers will provide resources, knowledge, and provide the confidence to overcome difficult symptoms.

Thrive Tribe

Direct Support

Having a diverse group of volunteers from every age, walk of life, and background means we can answer questions like these with first-hand experiences:

How do I tell my kids?

What do I tell my employer? I still need to work.

I have a rare cancer no one has heard of. Now what?

How do I deal with the changes in my body and my appearance?

My child has cancer. Where do I find help locally?

Resources & Community

The experts in emotional and social support for cancer are those who are presently living with it. These volunteers are here to provide support, as well as local resources and options to help you find the services you need.

The Peer Support Program offers cancer patients and their caregivers the opportunity to speak with others who have been there and can share their experiences. The program is a free, volunteer-driven remote support service (via phone or email).

What is Thrive Tribe?

The Thrive Tribe Program is built upon real people with stories connected to cancer that want to give back. They want to make the journey easier for someone else by sharing how they have already dealt with difficult situations and similar questions.

Interested? Here's how to join...

1

Call and talk with the volunteer coordinator at 812-402-8667. Let them know any questions or concerns you have.

2

We will send you a packet of information that outlines the program, as well as a consent form to sign and return.

3

Once we have received your information, we will set up a phone call to introduce you to a peer. Our door is always open to you and your family.
